greedy and were in the process of taking a second suit from the same store. The first one they had taken earlier in the day had belonged to the manager.

Kahn's and the Globe, when notified by the Lebanon police, hadn't missed the suits taken. Among the ones still in the possession of the shoplifters were two bearing Kahn and Globe labels.

Said the Lebanon police, "... it was one of the slickest games that they had seen worked. There is little thought of shoplifters carrying off articles as large as a suit of clothes, and little check is made in the suit department after customers leave."

Commented the World, "Yesterday local merchants went to Lebanon to identify the fakers, and were successful in securing two of the stolen suits taken from this city."
