

Women raised a stink over hogs running loose at their meeting last Friday night, repealed the hog ordinance. Almost anyone will sign any petition that is presented to them if it costs nothing, but those opposed to the hogs running at large are about two to one in the city. The anti-hogites don't make a strong enough fight."

Hog wild, from page A1

Siding for once with the Courier, the Telephone put it differently, "Argument is not necessary, though, to show what the duty of the council is in this case. If any reasons are given, they ought to come from those who think these pestiferous animals ought to be allowed to run at large."

Furthermore, the Telephone deliberately challenged the pro-hogites to put their rhetoric and reasoning up front where everyone could see it in print. "If anyone has a reason why these animals in their infernal filth should be allowed to be a public nuisance, or why his hogs should supported at other people's expense, we will gladly print what he has to say."

The Telephone also called upon the women to re-double their efforts by canvassing the city.

Next week: The battle continues