

Family's difficulties big news in 1903

Looking back, from page C1

he would laugh like a maniac, and then he would break down and cry like a baby."

In spite of having sworn out a peace warrant to keep the rest of their property from being destroyed, Worrall's wife was said to have fainted when she learned that he had been arrested. The editor of the Evening World could not resist editorializing at the end of the front-page article: "It is a sad, very sad story of domestic infelicity, of a once happy home torn asunder, of love grown cold and turned to hatred."

Friends of the couple suggested he be removed to a private sanitarium. Was that advice taken? According to the July 11 edition of the Evening World, Worrall would be plying his trade (that of securing government pensions for veterans) out of a more centrally located office in Indianapolis, maintain his Bloomington office and return here only on Saturdays.

Perhaps the key sentence in that article was this: "His family will continue to live in this city."
