

Detective posts reward for fugitive

Scarbaugh, from page A1

— In fact the fugitive had made a couple of return forays to his own home to get money from his wife.

Actually, though, the men of the posse saw Scarbaugh twice while they were at the Nelson farm, they failed to capture him. In his hasty flight, he left behind his shotgun in the abandoned house.

While the officers were still hunting for Scarbaugh, a local man disclosed some rather damaging heresay that was no doubt "eaten up" by local crime buffs.

James Whitehead, a relative of Nunn's, said that the only way Nunn could return to Kentucky was "as a corpse," since he was wanted there for murdering a couple of men.

Next week: China Harris's Flasco