

Student riots nothing new at IU

Looking Back, from page C1

ty's image was being tarnished by the incidents, Professor Lindley spoke up at a "Love Fest for Law Enforcement" banquet. He described the "unique" relationship between students and townspeople and added that the streets of the town should be made as free to the students as possible.

Unfortunately, they were not in attendance at the feast, and the message didn't reach them. There were more incidents to come. And for some time the very mention of a "freshman/sophomore scrap" made Bloomington businessmen think about boarding up their storefronts.

Next week: More town and gown confrontations.
