

Bloomington, the best country town south of Indianapolis has

3,000 souls

Three hotels.

Two dentists.

Five jewelers.

Two bakeries.

Seven doctors.

Two dairymen.

Four turnpikes.

Two grist mills.

One $40,000 jail.

One brick yard.

Sixteen lawyers.

One coal dealer.

An artesian well.

One cigar factory.

Two brass bands.

Four restaurants.

One opera house.

Three drug stores.

One marble shop.

Two billiard halls.

Two livery stables.

One table factory.

Four barber shops.

Ten grocery stores.

Two lumber yards.

Three paint shops.

Two harness shops.

Seven dress makers.

Two furniture stores.

Two abstract offices.

Six insurance offices.

One telegraph office.

Two photographers.

Two spoke factories.

One Chinese laundry.

One brick court house.

One furniture factory.

One steam fire engine.

Three fire companies.

Four carpenter shops.

Three millinery stores.

Five Blacksmith shops.

One Steam planning mill.

Two real estate agencies.

One railroad roundhouse.

Two flour and feed stores.

Two circulating libraries.

Three weekly newspapers.

Four boot and shoe shops.

One Tribe I. O. Red Men.

One First National Bank.

Two justices of the peace.

One book and news depot.

State University buildings.

One brick fire engine house.

Four building stone quarries.

One Order Knights of Honor.

Two exclusive clothing houses.

Two hardware and stove stores.

One foundry and machine shop.

One Masonic Lodge and Chapter.

A handsome City Hall building.

Two Undertaking establishments.

Eight dry goods and notion houses.

One Post Grand Army of the Republic.

Two merchant tailoring establishments.

One Catholic and nine Protestant churches.

One Women's Christian Temperance Union