

Fence didn't stop fans trying to see for free

Looking back, from page C1

through this, and if the parents haven't recognized their boys it is because they are still covered with tar."

In what could be considered an excess of zeal on Andrews' part, he also found five men standing on a stump and peeking over the fence. They (or rather the stump) got the tar treatment, too.

Added the Courier, "He smeared the tar while the men were still standing there, and occasionally he would make a mistake and get a quart or two of tar on the men's shoes instead of the stump."

It should be noted that because of all of Andrews' conscientious activity, he didn't see any of the game. Perhaps his compensation for building the spectator-proof fence did not include a free ticket.

Who won the game? Well, according to the Courier, the IU football eleven fought gallantly, but lost to Notre Dame. The score, by the way, was 11 to 5.